Liverpool goalkeeper Simon Mignolet hosted a training session for over 200 kids in his Belgium homeland on Saturday.

The Reds shot-stopper is back in his hometown of Sint-Truiden and was at Stayen stadium to take charge of coaching local children from the area in connection with an Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis charity.

Mignolet is an ambassador for the ALS Liga charity, and was at the stadium on Saturday to face penalties from the youngsters, as well as hand out tips on how they can improve.

The Belgium international was happy to sign shirts and footballs and posted a number of photos onto his Instagram account during the event.

The day started with training at 11am, with three different hour-long sessions, before a photo and signing event with Mignolet to take the afternoon up to 5pm.

The ALS Liga website said: "Simon Mignolet has decided to put his shoulders under the ALS League, but he does not want to do that alone.

"We are stronger together and so Simon is looking for your support. Has your son or daughter ever wanted to test their penalties against a Red Devil? (Belgium international). Then that moment has arrived.
